Georgia Southern University Holds Fall 2012 Convocation

AUGUST 15, 2012

Georgia Southern University President Brooks Keel, Ph.D., welcomed faculty and staff during the 2012 Fall Convocation as the University makes final preparations for the upcoming fall semester. The ceremony, which is held each fall at the Performing Arts Center, was attended by nearly 900 faculty and staff members.

The theme for the annual convocation was "Engaging Our Future Together."

"Convocation and commencement are the two greatest events at any university," said Keel. "This past year has been full of outstanding accomplishments and the year ahead is not without challenges. Georgia Southern is growing and changing for the better and I am excited about our future."

Keel spoke to a capacity crowd and recognized the work of the University's outstanding faculty members including both teaching and research activity. He highlighted the University's numerous achievements during the past year and then focused on Georgia Southern's expanding role in Georgia, particularly southeast Georgia noting that the institution is the largest University south of Atlanta. "We have a responsibility to the state of Georgia and this region to get bigger. Bigger in research, visual and performing arts, educational opportunities including strategic new degree programs, economic development and athletics. To become a national comprehensive research, we have to be nimble."

Keel highlighted some of the positive steps the University is taking to address a growing student population including the planned hiring of additional faculty members. "Our goal is to ensure that as we continue to grow, we maintain the 'small feel' that is one of the main reasons students choose Georgia Southern."

During the ceremony, Keel, along with Jean Bartels, Ph.D., provost and vice president for Academic Affairs presented the 2012-2013 Faculty Awards for Excellence. Established in 1985, the awards recognize excellence in service, contributions to instruction and research and creative scholarly activity. Since the awards began 26 years ago, only 162 have been presented. In 1988, Georgia Southern Professor Emeritus, Sculpture Pat Steadman was commissioned to create a special medallion that is presented to each award winner.

The theater program at Georgia Southern University will kick off its 2012-2013 season with the second installment of "Wham, Bam, Play Slam." The unique 24-hour production event introduces new and returning students to each other and the theater program, and provides a unique opportunity to showcase their talents.

"Last year's Play Slam was really successful at getting new students to meet returning students and the plays that were written were hysterical," said Lisa Abbott, assistant professor of theatre at Georgia Southern and the coordinator of the unique event.

Every aspect of "Wham, Bam, Play Slam" is left to chance, including the teaming of the playwrights, directors and actors. Students will arrive at the Black Box Theatre at the University's Center for Art and Theatre at 7 p.m. on Aug. 24. They introduce themselves to one another – identifying themselves as playwrights, actors or directors – and then take part in theater and improvisation exercises. The playwrights then draw the name of a director and various actors from a hat. The groups introduce themselves and the playwrights spend the rest of the evening working on their scripts.

"The event is great for writers whose creativity is opened by time-pressure," Abbott said. "Some of our writers get really into the exercise and have even ended up sleeping at the theater because they were writing throughout the night."

The following day (Aug. 25), the casts will reconvene at the Center for Art & Theatre and rehearsals for the plays scripted by the writers begin. Later than evening, the audience arrives and the curtain goes up at 7:30 p.m. where each play is then performed.

The Aug. 24 event is open to all Georgia Southern students and the Aug. 25 production is free and open to the public. Please visit <http://class.GeorgiaSouthern.edu/commarts> to view the theatre program's complete fall schedule.
